

The Journal of Historical Review index, 1980–1998

COMPILED BY GREG RAVEN

To mark the publication of the first 17 volumes of the Journal, we have compiled a listing of all articles and reviews that have appeared in the Journal over the years, and are providing it here as a supplement to this issue. Also included are signed readers' letters, and some notable quotations.

The main listing is arranged chronologically by volume and number, with individual entries arranged alphabetically by author and title for each issue. Items with no author are arranged by title before the other listings. Each listing shows the page number where the item starts.

At the beginning of each entry is a reference number that is used with the topic and author indexes.

To use the topic or author index, locate the topic or author in which you are interested and note the reference number(s) that follow the index listing. These numbers correspond to the reference numbers at the beginning of the entries in the main, chronological listing.

BURDEN of EMPIRE

"There is no comfort in history for those who put their faith in forms; who think there is safeguard in words inscribed on parchment, preserved in a glass case, produced in facsimile and hauled to and fro on a Freedom Train."

"A government that had been supported by the people and so controlled by the people became one that supported the people and so controlled them. Much of it is irreversible."

"We have crossed the boundary that lies between Republic and Empire."

"Garrett's three trenchant brochures are indispensable to anybody who wishes to understand 'the strange death of liberal America' and desires to do something to check these dolorous and fateful trends in our political and economic life." — Professor Harry Elmer Barnes, historian.

"His keen perception and his forceful direct language are unsurpassed by any author." — Professor Ludwig von Mises, economist.

"This triad is must material for those who would be informed of the past, aware of the present, and concerned about the future." — State Senator Jack B. Tenney, California.

"The most radical view of the New Deal was that of libertarian essayist and novelist Garet Garrett ..." — Professor Murray Rothbard.
